

Landon Stevens

- Brief Bio -

Landon Stevens is the Director of Policy at Strata, an academic research center based in Logan Utah that aims to find market based solutions to energy, environment, and public lands policy issues.

Landon specializes in evaluating U.S. energy policy and addressing public lands issues in the West. Prior to joining Strata, Stevens led public policy efforts at the Institute for Energy Research in Washington D.C.

Stevens received a degree in Communications from Brigham Young University and completed his Masters in Public Policy from George Mason University. He is currently working on completing doctoral work at Utah State University in natural resource sociology, specifically exploring the energy, food, and water resiliency of communities in the Columbia River Basin.

A 6th generation Arizonan, his ancestors were instrumental in settling various parts of the mountain west from Mexico to Canada. Stevens lives in Providence Utah with his wife Kelsey, and his three children.